Contents

Keynote Lecture

Professor Simon Bainbridge (University of Lancaster): “War by other means”: Battling Boney After Waterloo ......................................................... 2

Abstracts of Papers ............................................................................................................. 2

Dr Andrew Bamford (Independent Scholar): “Out-Generalled and Disgracefully Beaten” Responses to Defeat at Bergen-op-Zoom, March 1814 2

Dr Ilya Berkovich (Hebrew University of Jerusalem): Peasants into Soldiers – Drill, Honour and the Socialisation of Eighteenth-Century Recruits .............. 3

Tom Boyd (University of Oxford): Scottish soldiering and cultural identities in the long eighteenth century ............................................................................. 3

Dr Steve Brumwell (Independent Scholar): “Canvas town” and tactical laboratory: life at Newport Camp, 1740-58 ................................................................. 4

Dr Louise Carter (University Campus Suffolk): ‘Accomplices to the Work of Death’: Mortality and Soldiering 1793-1815 ......................................................... 4

Professor Bruce Collins (Sheffield Hallam University): Sieges and the British Representation of Warfare 1780-1830 ................................................................. 5

Dani Coombs (University of Leeds): Soldiers, civilians and the black market trade in ‘Regimental Necessaries’, 1740-1830 ......................................................... 5

Pedro Couceiro (Higher School of Education - Polythecnic Institute of Bragança): Peninsular War and society - the impacts of the French invasions at Porto (1807-11) ........................................................................................................ 6

Elodie Duche (University of Warwick): Embattled Britons: The Society of British Prisoners of War on Hostile French Shores (1803-1814) ......................... 6

Sarah Goldsmith (University of York): War, Military Culture and the Grand Tour of Europe, 1700-1780 ................................................................. 7

Alexis Harasemovitch Truax (University of Texas at Austin): Outsourcing Empire: Privateers and National Allegiance in the British Mediterranean .......... 7

Eleanor Harris (University of Stirling): Edinburgh Episcopalians and the Napoleonic Wars ........................................................................................................ 8

Dr Jennine Hurl-Eamon (Trent University): A Closer Look at the Married Soldier in the Hanoverian Army ..................................................................................... 8

Dr Graciela Iglesias Rogers (St. Peter’s College, University of Oxford): In both victory and defeat: a transnational approach to the British experience of the Napoleonic wars ..................................................................................... 9
Mr John Killick (University of Leeds): Who won the war of 1812?. A tale of two cities, the experience of Alexander Brown of Baltimore and Thomas Cope of Philadelphia ................................................................. 9
Steve King (University of Leeds): DeLancey’s Police Barracks .................. 10
Karen Lacey Holder (King’s College London): Mercenarism and Sensibility in La Nouvelle Héloïse .................................................................................................................. 11
Dr Valerie Mainz (University of Leeds): Signing up for glory? .................. 11
Dr Nick Mansfield (University of Central Lancashire): Common soldiers as workers, 1790-1830 .................................................................................................................. 12
Dr Matthew McCormack (University of Northampton): The material culture of the militia camp .................................................................................................................. 12
Dr John Moores (Independent scholar): War and peace in English satirical prints of the Napoleonic era .................................................................................................................. 13
Gains Kirkland Murdoch (University of Aberdeen): The Question of a Scottish Militia 1707-1797 .................................................................................................................. 13
Dr Matthew Neufeld (University of Saskatchewan): The Public Scandal of the Commission for Sick and Wounded Seamen during the Nine Years War .... 14
Caroline Nielsen (Newcastle University): “And Your Petitioner will ever Pray Fight!": Former Soldiers, Poverty and Poor Relief in England, c.1770-1820 14
Dr Regina Poertner (Swansea University): Law, finance, and landed property in 18th century Scotland .................................................................................................................. 15
Dr John Rumsby (Independent Scholar): "The Soldier slighted"? Social attitudes towards veteran soldiers c1815-c1850 ......................................................... 15
Neil Sanghvi (St Hilda's College, Oxford): Public Interest in Military Matters During the War of the Spanish Succession 1702-1713............................................. 16
Professor Phil Shaw (University of Leicester): All the News That’s Fit To Paint: Wilkie, Wellington and the Battle of Waterloo ......................................................... 16
Will Tatum (Brown University): Dangers of Victory: Military Reform and the Mutiny Bill Debates of 1749-51 ............................................................................................. 17
Vasavi Visen: The 'Great Game' in Letters : Official Correspondences from Britain and Russia .................................................................................................................. 18
Kenton White: Arms Manufacture in Britain 1750 - 1815. Supplying the Victory ................................................................................................................................. 19
Acknowledgements ...................................................................................... 19
Sponsors ........................................................................................................ 19
Pedro Couceiro (Higher School of Education - Polytechnic Institute of Bragança): Peninsular War and society - the impacts of the French invasions at Porto (1807-11)

During the peninsular war, Porto was invaded two times for french troops (1808-1809). The Portuguese traditional sources about the French invasions describe, on a patriotic rhetoric and through a denunciative discourse, and beyond a whole series of economic and social constraints and the governmental disorientation that the kingdom suffered by the usurpation of power, a series of abuses and outrages perpetrated by the French and English troops that victimize the population of Porto. Among the many possible approaches, we privilege an assessment of the impacts of war from the people’s daily life in an adverse context. We intend to feel, through their reports and diverse sources of information, the economic, social, organizational and sociability constraints in an adverse context of military occupation of the real urban space, further compounded by the absence of the Portuguese government exile in Brazil and a decreased local authority before the haughty ways of the “enemy”.

Elodie Duche (University of Warwick): Embattled Britons: The Society of British Prisoners of War on Hostile French Shores (1803-1814)

Captured in the various theatres of a global and total war, around 15 000 British subjects were detained in France during the Napoleonic Era. Either civilians arrested en masse in 1803, or military and merchant servicemen (Royal Navy, Field Army, East India Company) taken under arms following the resumption of hostilities, these prisoners formed microcosms of British society abroad. As ‘first-class captives’, they recreated a home-away-from-home, with their wives, children and servants, and were eager to maintain the link with the mother country through the creation of a transnational charity network, supporting patriotism, religious obedience and socio-professional hierarchies amongst them.

Yet, the return of these prisoners in Britain, after a decade spent in contact with the Gallic ‘Other’, proved problematic. Drawing on the press and narratives of captivity, this paper will reflect on the perception of this captive diaspora at home. I will argue that captivity crystallised societal dynamics affecting Britain at a pivotal moment of nation-building. The reception of narratives of captivity in the British Isles offers a unique insight into representations of war and the unequal reintegration of these anti-heroes, who, though defeated, presented themselves as ‘free-born Britons’ returning to a victorious Britain.