"Conflicting stories: (auto)biographic narratives of migration and social memory" | |
The process of travelling will be perceived as a device for the inscription of social and external codes upon the individual (and the collective) bodies. The spaces which they occupy turn into extensions of those bodies, corresponding to the sets of codes which mediate them - deviant bodies (the refugee, the hermaphrodite, the wanderer) will then occupy spaces created for those so-called alternative states of being, often displaced and set in the periphery of representation. The spaces that these characters occupy are often transitory, one’s presence in them is ephemeral and only meant for the action of being crossed; to travel is to forget, to forge new identitary traits that will alter, if not erase, what the subject was before engaging in that same journey, as the body is then faced as an object in-transit. The places to where it arrives create landscapes for the definition of a new identity, one which will give in to processes of acculturation which allow the subject to forget what preceded it, as memories of the past are transformed and manipulated for the maintenance of the present through the process of creating narratives which fictionalize time and space.

Section A: Transit places and displaced memories
(Auditório ILCH - 11:30-12:30)
Chair: Yvonne Hendrich (U. Mainz, Germany)

Ana Maria Alves (IP Bragança/CLLC-U. Aveiro, Portugal):
"Exile guaranteed by Varian Fry and Aristides Sousa Mendes. Bordeaux and Marseille at the time of Rescue"

In 1940, the Portuguese diplomat Sousa Mendes, then consul in Bordeaux, decides to rebel against decisions of his government, and to give visas to all those who asked him and so begins his action of rescuing them. The number of those who escaped the clutches of the Nazis is estimated at 30,000 people.

At the same time, such as Sousa Mendes, a young American journalist Varian Fry is sent to Marseille. His mission: to release artists, intellectuals and political activists, often Jews, threatened by the Gestapo.

The modest organization that he sets in motion opposes Article 19 of the Armistice Agreement between France and Germany: "The French government is required to deliver on demand all citizens appointed by the Reich government. "For thirteen months, before the Vichy police expels Varian Fry - with the approval of the United States - the American relief Center, by legal or illegal means, saves many thousands of people. These rescue actions were stemmed from what has been called "the resistance before the Resistance", and from what appears today as an international solidarity movement. We propose to understand two singular historical moments, at the same time we pay tribute to the heroism of the ordinary individual against the State unreasoning.

Ana Maria Alves is an Assistant Professor at the Foreign Languages Department of the School of Education at the Polytechnic Institute of Bragança, Portugal. She is an integrated member of the CLC (Center for Research in Languages and Cultures) at the University of Aveiro. Since 2005 she is a member of Société des études céliniennes and has participated in numerous international events dedicated to the works of Louis-Ferdinand Céline. In 2003 she has been awarded her master’s degree with the dissertation “De l’antisémitisme chez Louis-Ferdinand Céline”, by the Aveiro University. In 2009, at the same university she has been awarded her Doctorate in Culture with the thesis “Guerre et Exil chez Louis-Ferdinand Céline” published by Peter Lang in 2013. Her main fields of research are: Sociology of the intellectuals, of their culture and literature; Identity Problems and the Exile discourse. Biography; France during the 40s as a privileged refuge for the intellectuals and anti-Nazi artists.

Ana Luísa Pires (U. Aveiro/IP Leiria, Portugal):
"Recovering transcultural heritage in Zakes Mda’s The Heart of Redness"

Zakes Mda sets the two narratives that constitute The Heart of Redness around two crucial historical moments of redefinition for the Xhosa community, namely 1856, the year of the “Cattle-Killing Movement” in the Eastern Cape, and 1998, only four years after the first democratic elections in the country. In the two narratives Mda problematizes complex historical and contemporary questions, revealing past and present circumstances of suffering and exploitation. In a complicated time for the amaXhosa, who were facing the advances of the British into their territory, as well as the terrible effects of the lung disease imported from Europe, which was decimating their cattle, Nongqawuse prophesied that the ancestors of the amaXhosa would rise from the sea to destroy the invading British settlers if the amaXhosa killed all their cattle and destroyed their crops. This prophecy occasioned massive killings of cattle in amaXhosa territories in 1857 and originated a division among the amaXhosa population between those who believed it – the Believers- and those who did not – the Unbelievers.
